Later in the nineteenth century, the demand for language reform became political. Turkish nationalists sought a language that would unite rather than divide the people. In the writings of Ziya Gökalp (1924), Turkish nationalism was presented as the force uniting all those who were by language and ethnic background Turks.

Ataturk's reforms | All About Turkey

In a search for a more inclusive kind of history of the early republican period, Hale Yilmaz focuses on the interactions between the young Turkish state and society regarding the implementation of four specific nationalist-modernist reforms, namely the Hat Law of 1925 on men's attire, attempts to modernize women's dress, the Alphabet Law of 1928, which introduced a new Latin-based Turkish script to replace the Arabic-based Ottoman script, and finally the promulgation and celebration of ...

Young Turks (Turkish: Jön Türkler) was a political reform movement in the early 20th century that favored the replacement of the Ottoman Empire's absolute monarchy with a constitutional government. They led a rebellion against the absolute rule of Sultan Abdulhamid II in the 1908 Young Turk Revolution. With this revolution, the Young Turks helped to establish the Second Constitutional Era in ...

Young Turks - Wikipedia

The revolution was the foundation on which the reforms were built: no revolution no reforms, not even in clothing, language, or festivals. It is also worth emphasizing that the Kemalists described the republic they established as "the Republic of Turkey" and not the Turkish Republic; the assembly was called the "Grand National Assembly of Turkey," a practice that continues to the present.
